

Eman Mohamed Saleh 2005

Child Labor in Metropolitan Governorates Egypt 2001

Children represent the precious resources for the future of any society. Child labor is a serious problem in many parts of the world. This problem is not limited to developing countries but it exists wherever poverty exists.

The objectives of the present study are as the follows:

- Defining the characteristics of working children aged from (6-14 years).
- Investigating the variables affecting child labor.
- Examining the environmental conditions and hazards in which children are working.
- Proposing a range of strategies for policy interventions to control child labor and to offer better health, learning and social services for working children who can not leave their work.
- Studying the child labor legislation

The study depends on Bi-variate Multivariate analysis.