

Khalid Ahmed Ali Saad, 2017 (235)

Strategies for coping with shocks: evidence from Yemen Households and Budget Survey (2014)

The study examines strategies used by Yemeni Households for coping with the shocks, and investigates whether there is any distinctive pattern in adopting these strategies.

The author tries to examine the type of shocks and find out their impact on household well-being and which household are more vulnerable to shocks.

Evaluate the livelihood strategies practiced by Yemeni households.

Investigate the coping strategies implemented by the households to overcome any household shock.

Examine the coping strategies for less loads

The study used household budget survey, 2014

The author depended on three empirical models of household selection of coping strategies are estimated to assess the impact of household characteristics and types of shocks on choice of coping strategies.

- I. Bivariate Analysis
- II. Probability Model.
- III. Multinomial Logistic Model

Finally, policy makers should consider diversified livelihood strategies that encourage various income generating activities, increase access to credit.

Creating awareness and improving saving culture of the community which are vital to improve their livelihood.